Five Children Injured When Railing Breaks

Five small children were more or less seriously injured late yesterday afternoon when a railing on which they were leaning in the rear of the Eddy store, broke, throwing them to the concrete flooring below, a distance of fifteen feet. The injured were:

Katie Mundok, aged 7, head cut, bruised about body and right wrist broken.

Ella Cohn, aged 6, shoulder broken and bruised body.

Herman Putman, aged 7, shoulder broken and head bruised.

Mary Zust, aged 7, bruised about head and arms.

Julia Zust, aged 2, bruised about body and arms.

The children were playing ball in the alley between Schoonmaker and Donner, between Fifth and Sixth street, when the ball accidently rolled down the opening in the rear of the drug store. The children hurried over to look for the ball and were leaning against a small railing when it gave way and they fell headfirst to the flooring.

The children all reside within a short distance of the scene of the accident and their cries soon brought parents and others who assisted in removing the injured to their homes. Medical attention was given to those most seriously injured and this morning the condition of all are favorable. The Mundok is probably the worst injured of the children and Dr. Israel found it necessary to give her an anaesthetic before setting her broken wrist.

Young Lad Injured

Andrew Laska, a fourteen year old youth, was badly injured yesterday morning when a horse hitched to a delivery wagon belonging to his father took fright belonging to his father took fright for some unknown reason and ran off. Dashing down Donner avenue from Third street, the horse collided with a number of vehicles in front of the freight station and the little lad was thrown to the street by the impact The bone in his right hand was broken and the hand was badly lascerated.

Commits Suicide

Joseph Bealer, a well known resident of Webster, committed suicide some time during the night by drinking a quantity of carbolic acid. The remains were taken to the Rabe undertaking rooms at Donora and the funeral will be held Sunday. The deceased was 68 years of age and is survived by four children. It is thought by many that his rash act was caused by the loss of a sum of money during the past week and this added to the fact that he has been grieving ever since the death of his wife several years ago.

Auto Bus Goes Over Embankment

The third accident reported since the opening of the new road to Webster occurred yesterday at 3 oclock when the seven passenger touring car which is being used as a bus between this city and Donora went over an embankment. The auto was making a trip to this city with five passengers and when a short distance from the Kennedy mine attempted to pass a machine going the opposite direction. The road is rather narrow at this piont and the Buick skidded and left the road, going over a five foot embankment and turning completely over. The driver, Tagger Pasquali of Webster, had his right shoulder bone broken, but fortunately the passengers escaped without any injury. The car was badly damaged and was hauled to the Eureka garage at Monongahela for repairs.

THAW IS FREE

Judge Peter A. Hendrick made public his decision in the Thaw sanity case at 10:30 this morning, allowing the prisoner his freedom from the Mattewan asylum for the criminal insane. The case was appealed at once, but bond was furnished and Thaw left the court room a free man, the first time in nine years. The nine years' legal battle is said to have cost the Thaw family more than $1,000,000 and the state hospital for the insane $300,000. It is expected that Thaw will return to Pittsburgh.

Concert A Success

The musical concert given under the auspices of the Afro-American League in the Baptist church last evening was a great success and the large audience that was present showed their appreciation by applauding each number. Those who participated in the contest are to be congratulated for their efforts, which showed the result of diligent study and practice. A number of the audience remained for the reception after the lecture, which proved to be one of the pleasing events of the evening. The committee on arrangements were highly pleased with the result of their efforts.

Local Water Fight Goes Merrily On

Tadpoles, german carp and turtles with water on the side. Not a bad bill of fare, is it? If you were at a restaurant and would read that on a bill of fare and have the price quoted about the same as is charged by the Tri-Citites water company, you would think the charge all right. But when we have it served through our spigots, we don't seem to appreciate it. But people are never satisfied with anything it seems, at least that's what the water company must think by this time with all these complaints coming in. This office has been so busy with water customers that we have about decided to put in a water department or sell some watered stock or some bogus bonds or something of the kind to satisfy the people who want to stay with us on the water question. The water question is the greatest that ever occupied the minds of the people. The Board of Trade has appropriated $50.00 for a starter to carry on the investigation, others have offered to contribute to a fund for attorneys' fees. So the fight is certain to go on.

People are in a quardary to know just why the water company chose this time to boost the rates when the nations of the world are at war, when industry is stagnated and when there is a general panic and a call to help the poor, the starving and afflicted. But public service corporations don't generaly think of afflictions, of misery and poverty. What they think of is getting the money. The water

Sell Chautauqua Tickets For Benefit Of Firemen

The ticket sale for the great Chautauqua which will appear here on the Iowa school grounds from July 26 to August 1st, will be conducted similar to the campaign for the Belgian sufferers. The committee decided yesterday afternoon to district the town and place sales people in every district so that everybody would get a chance to get tickets and contribute something toward a fund for the Volunteer Firemen.

The Volunteer Firemen of Monessen have not had the support they are justly entitled to. Heretofore it has been a sort of come easy, go easy organization and if the boys needed any support they had to go out and dig it up. They have done this year in and year out and have been successful in building up a worthy institution, even acquiring a lot upon which they expect to build a permanent home. All of this enterprise has borne fruit. The best men of the town have now resolved to do something for this worthy organization. They decided to hold a Chautauqua and provide wholesome entertainment of an educational nature and be able to turn over to the firemen a nice contribution.

The town and towns people generally are asked to contribute something to this worthy cause. Not property owners alone but every family that might be visited by a fire owes it to the firemen, to themselves and to the community to support the firemen, to make it possible for that body to equip itself in such a manner as to give the best service possible.

When the solicitor calls upon you, think of your duty to yourself, and to the community and buy one or more tickets, encourage the people who go about for this worthy cause and above all things attend the Chautauqua for your own good. Some of the most prominent public speakers on the platform will he here, rare talent of an entertaining and instructive nature will be on the program and no one can afford to stay away. Don't forget the Chautauqua.

Michael's Child Dead

Our Frankest Opinion

In the broadest, moral sense, all war is dishonorable. After all the centuries of civilization, intellectual progress, Christian endeavor and experience with the folly of war, it is dishonorable to men that they cannot settle all their differences without reversion to the policy of brutes—mutual annihilation or mutilation.

But there is still a limit to the possibilities of peaceful settlement of demands and disputes. A limit beyond which refusal to fight is more dishonorable than war. There is no living thing, in animal or vegetable world, that is not equipped with means for combatting enemies of its perfect development—call it ideals, in the case of mankind.

Nations are but collections of individuals—segregations due sometimes to color, sometimes to language, sometimes to climate, sometimes to nature's physical features, sometimes to necessity for expansion, but all brothers. And the ideals of our nation are promotion and preservation of the God-given rights of man, and peace and good will toward all other nations. The torch in the hand of Bartholdi's "Liberty" is not solely a sign to the immigrant that ours is a land strong for the inalienable rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; it is not solely a beacon for incoming pilots. It is, in addition, a proclamation of enlightenment to the whole world, a message of high national aspiration and example given the outgoing foreigner to bear into all the corners of the earth.

War is horrible, so dishonorable, so foolish, that we should make any sacrifice to avoid it, up to the point of immolating our national ideas—ourselves.

"Life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." We speak of these as our national ideas. We have founded a nation upon them as our "inalienable rights" and maintain the doctrine that they are the natural rights of all men, everywhere. We must fight for them, die for them, if necessay, or perish as a nation with them. What are they, as concerns our relations with the belligerents of Europe? We offer this:

That Americans have a right to travel and trade upon the waters of the earth, whenever and wherever not conflicting with the rights of other nations. Every right, individual or national, has its limitation at the line of conflict with the rights of others.

International rights are created by international law, the formal agreement of nations. The fact that there is no international law to adequately cover aerial or submarine warfare, deprives no nation of the right to make such warfare. Nor can we go to war without too great dishonor, because the exigencies of such warfare occasionally preclude search, investigation, warning before decisive action. Our ideals can be conserved by keeping Americans off belligerent ships. Peace and our ideals are more precious than the lives of a thousand Americans, and the Americans who jeopardize these things commit an offense against their own nation.

These words are not a brief for a peace-at-any-price policy. Rights that are not or cannot be asserted and maintained are dead rights, valueless as ideals and impotent as factors of national character.

On the contrary, we are for war at any price if necessary to maintain our inalienable rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. To surrender such rights means to surrender our place upon this earth and to repudiate our mission of enlightenment to all the peoples of the earth.

Peaceful Americans in American or other neutral ships, engaged in non-contraband business, must have the backing of all this government's might, as an altenable, national right.

If Germany's submarine warfare persistently destroys Americans so enjoying their rights, Germany must control such warfare with safety to Americans, or Uncle Sam must apply a remedy that will cure.

If Great Britain arbitrarily seizes and unreasonably holds such Americans or such American business, Uncle Sam must prescribe a radical platform for Great Britain.

The mad nations may disdain all the laws of God, man and nations, but the safe limit of their rights is reached in attempted destruction of the ideals and rights of the United States.

Peace? Yes. Great sacrifice for it, if necessary. But to quail under indiscriminate assault upon our just rights finally mean greater dishonor, great calamity to our country and to all mankind than war.

Look at the civilized world. You see our country almost the sole practical exponent of civilization. The great horror and loss of this war lie not in the destruction of men, fine buildings, money hoards, material things, but in the warping and shriveling of men's souls and aspirations. Will the end bring anarchy, or still more "divinity" of rules by right of birth?

Well may the United States, in such a crisis in the fate of civilized men, stand forth, with all its moral and physical power for the rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Jack Keefer Full Fledged Benedict

Although Jack Keefer took part in numerous minstrels and home talents, he never participated in a street parade until last evening, when he was the center of attraction in an impromptu parade that traversed the principal streets of the town.

Jack took unto himself a wife several weeks ago and his brother Elks have been waiting patiently to initiate him into the realms of wedded bliss. Everything was in readiness last evening and they pounced on the unsuspecting benedict at his home early in the evening and kept him prisoner until time for the festivities to begin.

A small delivery wagon with a wire cage was secured and the prisoner placed in one of his famous minstrel costumes. Headed by an oriental band and with seven auto loads of Elks from this city and Donora, they made their rounds of the town with plenty of red fire and signs and placards telling of the incident. The procession came to a stop at the new Elks' home, where the steward had prepared a lunch for the crowd and their victim.

About fifty guests were present at the banquet. Since Jack has recently crossed the great divide joining the innumerable caravan which has moved to that pale and mysterious realm of matrimony, it was to do honor to this auspicious occasion that a number of his friends decided that there must be something doing for Jack.

The meal consisted of chicken and many other things too good to mention and Chef George seemed to have risen superbly above the occasion and furnished a meal fit for the gods to feed upon. The toastmaster of the evening was William A. McShaffrey, whose oratorical ability stands alone the local field. William expostulated majestically, touching upon the life history of the honored guest and how the concensus of opinion was so universal that Jack would never marry; how time wrought such great changes in his being and finally he decided it was not good to be alone any longer and proposed, how that proposal was accepted which was the cause of such a gallant assemblage of friendship. Mack's remarks inspired, invigorated enthused and when he called for speeches the other orators of the evening could harldly sit still until their turn came. J. J. Cushing made a cracker jack of a speech. He has had a long acquaintance with the honored guest, knew many of his personal traits, and he spoke of what a good thing it was for Jack himself and the country that Jack had settled down. Other speakers were Roy Reeves, Jack Stevenson and the father of the groom.

Last but by no means least was that far famed and eloquent orator, William Watson of Donora, whose command of language and flow of eloquence is not outdone by Mark Anthony himself. When William started to expostulate, every man in the room held his breath. William started with his guttural tones, then went to second and finally got on high and up over the climaxes he went with a degree of earnestness that interested everyone present. Had he worked on the speech for a month, those who heard him say he could not have done better. He sank into his chair almost exhausted, but amidst showers of applause that echoed and re-echoed throughout the room.

The benedict choir then rendered a selection and the toastmaster called upon Mr. Keefer for remarks. Jack spoke feelingly of the past, touched upon the many good times he had had during his long career as a bachelor, but he declared that he is now steeped in happiness so deep that were he to return, returning were "wo'se than go o'er." He thanked the boys for the honor they had conferred upon him and concluded with the immortal Rip's phrase "May we all live long and prosper."

The Broken Coin

By EMERSON HOUGH

From the Scenario by Grace Cunard

A Story of Mystery and Adventure

(Copyright, 1915, by Wright A. Patterson)

SYNOPSIS.

Kitty Gray, newspaper woman, finds in a curio shop half of a broken coin, the mutilated inscription on which arouses her curiosity and leads her, at the order of her managing ed tor, to go to the principality of Gretzhoffen to piece out the story suggested by the inscription. She is followed, and on arrival in Gretzhoffen her adventures while chasing the secret of the broken coin begin.

SECOND INSTALLMENT

CHAPTER VI.

Count Frederick.

Kitty Gray turned suddenly to the man seated beside her in the motor, bending upon him a steady gaze.

"Who are you?" asked she. "Why did you follow me?"

The swathed figure suddenly straightened. "Whatever I am—whatever you may think me, do not believe me incapable of gratitude to yourself."

"What is your name?"

"They call me Roleau, mademoiselle."

Kitty Gray turned yet more closely to him, gazed straight into his eyes.

"Then why not enlist with me? Surely we have a common cause. We have a common enemy. Would it be wrong did you and I league against him?"

"You ask me, then—"

"To be my friend, my ally."

"Surely I owe him no allegiance further!" exclaimed Roleau bitterly. "He struck me like a dog."

"Yet you and I must see him again—and soon."

"What! Would you trust yourself once more in his presence? You are an American girl—you are innocent, you are ignorant. I warn you."

"None the less, if I am to go forward with the business which brought me here to Gretzhoffen, surely I must once more meet the Count Frederick.

The man at her side hesitated no more than an instant. "Very well," said he calmly. "As for me, my life has been forfeit many a time before now. What matter? I will go with you as you say. Indeed, I fancy I know why you ask me to go—they know me at the palace—they will admit us both."

It was as Roleau had said. When finally the two drew up to the court driveway in front of the count's palace, they were admitted without question. Roleau closed the door behind him and put a finger to his lips for silence.

"They will listen," he whispered. "Be careful. This is the room where Count Frederick receives his—friends."

Curiously, silently, Kitty sat or at times walked about the room, taking stock of the surroundings. Count Frederick entered.

"Mademoiselle! I am charmed! So you remember me?"

"You may say as much indeed," rejoined Kitty Gray calmly. "I saw you in the carriage this morning."

He turned now to Roleau, with no change in his countenance to indicate any recollection of the nature of their last meeting. "You may retire to the next room," said he, dismissing him with a wave of the hand.

"Do not in the least misunderstand me, Monsieur le Comte," said she lightly. "My business is very simple. I have a proposition to make to you—a business proposition."

'But I am not a business man," mocked the smiling antagonist who faced her. He came yet a half step closer.

"Are you so sure?" exclaimed she suddenly. "Is there no business in which also I am definitely concerned? Then why did you send a messenger to follow me in my own country, to ransack my apartments there, to violate my privacy even on the steamer?"

"My man served me but ill—if I may admit part of what you say mademoiselle."

"That is why I am here—and in his company! Yes, I know your messenger as I know you. Come, let us reason together over this, Monsieur le Comte. Shall it be business or war between us?"

The sheer audacity of this speech for one moment daunted Count Frederick. The next he broke into a roar of laughter and flung himself into a chair. "Admirable!" said he.

She started away from him, moving toward the door. "I came, Monsieur le Comte," said she boldly, "to ask you what price for the half coin which you seek to hold. Suppose, for instance, that Gretzhoffen loan were executed for you finally in New York—would that influence you at all? Come now, let us reason."

"I am beyond reason; I care little for the sordid side. I value not so much money as what money brings. It could bring me no more than what fortune has brought me at no cost, this morning—this very hour."

"Roleau!" cried Kitty suddenly. "A moi! Au secours! Vite!"

"You waste breath," laughed Count Frederick. "He cannot come."

Kitty made one swift dart toward the door. She was too late. The relentless face of her opponent smiled at her, his strong fingers turned the key in the lock, removed it, thrust it into his pocket.

"Mademoiselle," he said calmly, "you say you came on business. Very well, let us talk business. We know something of the history of a certain broken coin. Very good. You have half of it. We will say I have the other. Give me your half the coin, and I will let you go. Refuse, and I'll never let you go."

"I will do nothing under compulsion from you or any other man," said Kitty Gray stoutly. "I offer you a fair price for your half of the coin."

"You will not give it to me?"

"No! No!"

A loud pounding on the door interrupted them at this moment. "It is Roleau," smiled the count. "I will have him whipped."

The face of Kitty Gray had grown like marble. Suddenly, with one swift movement, she dashed her clenched hand with all her force into the face which bent toward her. A livid mark arose under the swift compact. The tall man staggered back. The next instant Kitty felt her wrist caught in an iron grasp. Struggling, she was forced backward. She felt another hand grasp her wrist.

The man Grahame, the count's valet, had appeared mysteriously from the alcove adjoining.

"Give me the coin!" insisted Count Frederick still. "Tell me where I may have it—or by the Lord! you will rest a long time to think this matter over."

"Excellency!" ejaculated the man Grahame suddenly. "On guard! He is breaking in the door. Quick, excellency!"

And even as Roleau, by a mighty heave burst in the door, Grahame and his master hurried Kitty to the rear door of the alcove. It made out upon a dimly lighted hall.

Roleau heard them pass, followed swiftly as he could. But it was empty. The purr of a motor getting under way reached his ears.

"So, then—we failed," said Roleau bitterly.

CHAPTER VII.

In the Desert.

Convinced against her will, as she hurried along in the grasp of the two powerful men, that compliance would serve her purpose better than resistance, Kitty Gray took her place on the seat of the motor car.

"More and more I admire you," said the man at her side, as the motor swung into its speed. "What a woman you are! If you would but give me time—"

"You shall have all the time you ask, Monsieur le Comte!"

"Still, I ponder as to your motive in all this. It cannot be money."

"Indeed it is money—in part."

"How much, mademoiselle?"

"A year's salary—I have got much at stake, on my word. Twelve hundred dollars, Monsier le Comte. It is a fortune for me."

Count Frederick flung himself back upon the cushions and laughed long and loud. "Twelve hundred dollars!" said he. "Twelve hundred dollars in a whole year, in an entire year? My dear, give me the half coin you have upon you, and I promise you shall have twelve thousand dollars to spend as you like each and every day of your life, as long as you live. Come now, is it a trade? You said you came to talk business."

For the first time now Kitty looked about her, scarce having realized how long their journey had been. So great had been their speed that by this time they had cleared the city walls of Gretzhoffen and passed the tilled farmlands of the villages. It was what was known locally as the desert—a neutral ground, not tilled and incapable of successful tillage, which lay between the two kingdoms of Gretzhoffen on the east and Grahoffen on the west.

Whether it was the heat of the sun which had expanded the air in the motor tires, or whether there was some sharp stone under the wheel, there was no time to determine; yet suddenly, with the usual rifelike report, there was an explosion of the tire. The car was practically helpless.

Kitty looked about her vaguely, fearfully, but as she bent from the open window she heard in the distance the chug of another motor, driven rapidly, thrown wide open and coming forward at great speed. "Quick! Grahame," the count demanded. "This is your work. She has it on her person. You must—yes, you must take it at once."

As he laid hand upon her, all the hot indignation of Kitty's soul flamed up. She battled as best she might. She defeated the man in his purpose of snatching at the string which he saw suspended about her neck. His suspicions were well founded, for once more Kitty had concealed her portion of the coin in a little bag which she carried thus. Baffled, and knowing that he had small time to finish his work, Grahame at length raised a dastardly hand and struck the girl in the face. She fell, stunned, at his feet.

"You ruffian, what have you done!" exclaimed his master, as with a thin smile Grahame held up the chamois bag.

But Count Frederick ripped it open, took from it what he saw, and thrust it into his pocket. Even as this happened, the pursuing car was closing in upon them. It was Roleau who sprang from the seat and hastened forward, revolver in hand. As he did so a weapon cracked from the car of Count Frederick, and Roleau, stumbling, fell forward and lay still.

"Come Grahame—quick." An instant later they had taken possession of the motor impressed by Roleau.

How long she remained senseless, she herself scarcely knew, but when Kitty stirred, raised her head, she saw lying close beside her the figure of the man who had sought to befriend her.

Kitty suddenly raised her hand to her neck. The cord was gone. The packet was missing.

When after a time she ceased in a useless effort to lug the heavy body of Roleau into the shelter of the car, she turned to gaze about her. She paused, her gaze arrested. Yes, a little caravan, apparently from some far off land, and journeying hither frankly enough across the neutral ground between these two little kingdoms.

The apparent leader of this little caravan was a reticent, dark-bearded man. He advanced now quietly toward the young woman.

"The lady is in distress? There has been trouble here—robbers, bandits—your man has been killed, perhaps. Yes, there are many such in this land, between the two kingdoms. There is no law here, mademoiselle. I cross as you see, with my own men armed. I am, if you please, a merchant of Grahoffen. Sometimes I do a little merchandising between the two kingdoms."

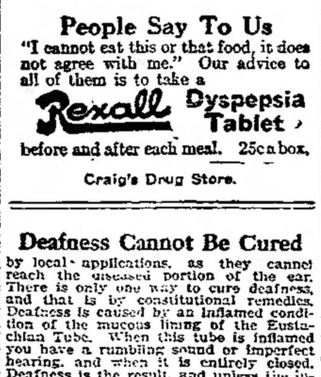
He pointed to the coat of arms on the door of the disabled car. "The Count Frederick of Gretzhoffen has been here."

"Aye, the Count Frederick! It was he who left us here."

He made a gesture now to his attendants, and as some of them lifted the limp form of Roleau, he himself assisted Kitty to mound. A few moments later and the strange procession was again on its way.

"Mademoiselle," said the leader at length, as he drew up alongside, "I must continue on into my own country. We are near the edge of it here. At the little stream which lies just beyond there is a house of a peasant—it is but a hovel and no fit place for you, that is true. But even so, that is better either for you or for your man."

They advanced now a little distance farther, until within full sight of the peasant's little hut. Radoz made signs that his charges should be assisted in dismounting.



Kitty Felt Her Wrist Caught in an Iron Grasp.

The cowlike peasant woman proved not inept in ministrations—perhaps she had seen such hurts as these before in her life here on the border. She made Roleau comfortable.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

MRS. BEIDEL TELLS WOMEN

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Kept Her in Health for 14 Years.

Shippensburg, Pa.—"It was several years ago that I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I then suffered terribly every month. My husband bought me a bottle of it and it helped me right away. Then after my second child was born I had a female trouble very badly and I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and in a short time was cured and have been in excellent health since. I always praise the Compound whenever I have an opportunity as I know it helped me and will help others. Lately I have given the Compound to my daughter and I wish all suffering women would take it and be convinced of its worth."—Mrs. JAMES A. BEIDEL, 113 N. Penn Street, Shippensburg, Pa.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Arrest Suspect

Ruben Warren of McKeesport, was brought to Monongahela this morning charged with the murder of Constable Peter Kromer at New Eagle on January 19. It is stated that following a quarred which took place between Warren and a woman by the name of Hurd in McKeesport a few days ago, which resulted in her arrest, she told the officers that Warren had confessed the murder to her.

At the time of the shooting, the Constable was at the home of William Bush and in the house at the time were Charles Martin and Christina Conway. Bush and Martin were held for court on a charge of murder but the grand jury ignored the case. State troopers stationed near Monongahela went to McKeesport yesterday and placed Warren under arrest and he will be given a preliminary hearing this afternoon, charged with the murder of the officer.

WON'T CLAIM HIM

The Asyrians won't claim Abraham Dehood who was fined $100 in police court. They say he is not of their nationality.

Notice Voters

Attention is called forcibly to the fact that Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, July 20 and 21, is the last and only remaining chance for voters to register for the September 21 primaries this year. Assessors of the various voting precincts will sit at the several polling places during these days to rectify the roll of voters.

All persons in doubt about their registration, due to removal or clerical error, are urged to call at their degistration places and consult the poll books. The First and Second wards in Monessen have been divided into two precincts each, First street being the dividing line in the First ward and Reed avenue in the Second ward.

Any assistance will be given whenever necessary if persons interested will call at the local newspaper offices on or before these days.

MORE WATER

If you buy your own water meter from the water company, pay your hard earned $12.00, for it, don't be deceived and think it is yours. It isn't. It still belongs to the company to measure their water to you. You have the investment, they reap the returns. You haven't bought the meter, you have just bought the investment.

If your water meter gets out of order, don't fix it. Let the water company man come and fix it. You only pay the man for fixing your investment for the company. Pay the bill before the 15th of each month or the water will be shut off and it will cost an extra dollar to get it turned on.

If you sink a well in your own yard, install a pump and pumping equipment, it would cost you probably $100 You would have your own water works and be independent and your rates would be the same from year to year. Nothing for the water. God doesn't charge for water.

If you haven't money enough on pay day to pay the rent, the grocer, butcher, gas, light and water, by all means pay the water company before any of the others or the water will be shut off. The gas and water companies are the only concerns that wouldn't help a fellow out if he were in hard luck, so pay them first.

Are there any clerical errors on the revised schedule that was mailed to you for water rent? If there were the company will make it right. Sure thing.

It takes more water to keep Monessen going than both Donora and Charleroi is the water company's complaint. Sure thing. Why not? Monessen is as large as both the other towns and we all use water. In Donora and Charleroi they don't.

—Monday at the Olympic—The second episode of "The Broken Coin" which has broken all records of all series.

Tuesday—The sixth episode of "Princess Hassan."

Water Fight Is On

company doesn't care how much they proffered in their testimony when they pulled off the big merger deal that there would be no raise in rates, that the rates would be lower if anything. The company gets a man to make those statements on the stand, then when the case is over, fire the man and that's all there is to it.

But the water is supposed to be good and pure and wholesome and appetizing. That is what it is supposed to be. With the naked eye, you can't see anything in it. But they say that an epidemic of tad poles cropped out in the tank and that the company got some german carp to eat up the tad poles, but the tad poles and the carp only had a love feast and decided to turn the place into an equarium for their own amusement and instead of eating up each other, they only indulged in love feasts and practiced Roseveltian doctrines by increasing and multiplying. Now if this is true, it may be that the new schedule of rates is not too high, for we are getting more than water. We are getting turtle soup and the water company is a turtle dove.

But what's the use to talk about the turtles, they don't hurt the water. It's the price that hurts the water. It's that new schedule of rates that makes the consumer have night mare, and still the company insults our intelligence by saying that the rates are not changed, that the old schedule is in effect and people are being charged the same as before, and if there are any contracts raised, it is due to clerical errors. If this is true, then the company needs a new bunch of clerks.

In the meantime, the investigation is officially going on. Our town officials are looking to the case now going on in Pittsburgh wherein the towns along the Pennsylvania lines have sued for lower rates and discrimination among consumers. Also they are observing the attitude of the Public Service commission to see if it really is a commission framed in the interest of the people and a square deal.
